JAMES McNEILL WHISTLER

JAMES McNEILL WHISTLER was born on July 11, 1834, and the record of St. Anne's Church in Lowell, Mass., shows that he was baptized there on November 9th of that year. He died in London on Friday, July 17, 1903, having been in ill health for a considerable period. He was thus on the verge of rounding out the Psalmist's threescore years and ten when the end came; his was a long life, and, on the whole, it was a happy one, though he may have sought to give the world the opposite impression. As with Corot, Millet, and many others, immediate popularity did not fall to his lot, but even as a young man he had the appreciation of the few,—the appreciation which he always preferred,—and long before his death he had won world-wide repute. Connoisseurs here and in Great Britain bought his works; artistic organizations formally honored him; among the members of his profession everywhere he was held in high regard, and to the people at large, his became one of the famous names of the time. The French government bought his great portrait of his mother, now in the Luxembourg; the Corporation of the City of Glasgow acquired his next most celebrated portrait, that of Carlyle; and examples of his art hang in the public museums of Boston, Chicago, and Pittsburg. During the past winter a memorial exhibition of productions by him was held by the Royal Scottish Academy in Edinburgh, and a similar enterprise was carried through on a much larger scale by the Copley Society in Boston.

INTRODUCTION

Two informal Whistler exhibitions have been held in the Grolier Club, but the present one has been made as complete as possible, all or nearly all of his etchings and dry-points being shown, as well as many "states" not heretofore described or discovered. There are also several subjects which have not been publicly exhibited before, so that it may be claimed that no such complete exhibition of this side of his genius has ever been given either in America or abroad.

Whistler began life with dreams of service in the army—his father and grandfather were both military men—dreams which throughout his career he looked back upon with unfading interest; but his sojourn at West Point was comparatively brief. Numerous anecdotes are told of his wit and serene faith in himself in those days; but to a cadet constituted as was Whistler, the discipline must have been extremely irksome, and at the end of nearly three years he was recommended for discharge, being totally deficient in mathematics, though always first in drawing.

INTRODUCTION

It is significant that there should be associated with his (brief) career in the government service at Washington a certain Coast Survey plate on which he etched a number of loosely drawn heads, showing, even at that early age and with all his inherited respect for the traditions of the place, a characteristic disregard of or indifference to official decorum. In short, the spirit of the etcher had to come out, the happy moment for seizing a congenial subject could not be permitted to pass, no matter what suffered, or, from the official point of view, was disfigured. But when as a young man he definitively embraced the career of an artist and began his studies in the atelier of Gleyre, it was not with the etching needle alone that he proposed to make his way. On the contrary, he seems to have had quite as much enthusiasm for the brush, and, in fact, he remained ever after a practitioner of both arts.

The story of his life in Paris and in London is too long to be recited in this place. It is sufficient to note that as an etcher and as a painter he followed ideals of his own, and that while his prints found a certain acceptance, his paintings were slower in obtaining recognition. Still, if he was not to know commercial success until his later years, his rank as a brilliant artist was freely acclaimed while he was still in his prime; and always, whether praised or condemned, he pursued his chosen path with ardor, painting figure pieces and nocturnes, making water-colors, pastels, and lithographs, and etching plate after plate. By the time he died he had put a remarkable mass of work to his credit.

Whistler was instinctively an etcher. Like Rembrandt, with whom he is unquestionably to be ranked in this field of art, he handled the needle as though it were a perfectly natural means of expression — as natural as the pen is to the average man. He was in his teens when he adorned with his irrelevant observations of human nature the plate mentioned on page 5. We know that he was in financial straits on his way back to Paris from his trip down the Rhine, remittances having failed him; but under these and other discouraging circumstances he made those wonderful, elaborate plates of eastern France (erroneously called the Brittany set) which delight all lovers of the art of etching. Less than three years before his death he went to Corsica for rest and recuperation, and although strictly enjoined not to work, he made several small etchings and drawings. He was, in fact, an etcher all his life long.

The catalogue which Mr. Frederick Wedmore compiled runs in the second edition (that of 1899) to 268 numbers. A Supplementary Catalogue, by "An Amateur," published in New York in 1902, swelled the record so as to account for 372 plates. Four hundred etchings by Whistler are now known, most of which are entered in the following pages. It is not the intention of their compiler to frame the complete and final catalogue, as that would involve almost endless research, both here and in Europe. He simply enumerates the prints to be exhibited, which unfortunately, owing to lack of wall space, must be shown in two, or possibly three sections.

It will be observed that certain of the etchings fall naturally into groups. The French set of the late fifties stands obviously not only for a definite period in Whistler's life, but for a clearly marked phase of his art, and as much may be said of the Thames set which followed not long after; but it should be pointed out that in the case of a man like Whistler, who was always working, it is injudicious to pigeonhole this or that group of his etchings as though it had an existence by itself, with no relation to anything coming before or after. There are points of contact between the French set and the Thames set, and they lead naturally enough up to the plates of the early seventies, in which Whistler's style suffered notable modification. The Venice set is not an isolated phenomenon; it illustrates another stage in his evolution, which should be followed with the same sense of continuity in the study of his French, Belgian, and Dutch plates, and his Naval Jubilee sketches. The steps in his development should also be traced with reference to the different states of individual plates and with some consideration of the qualities of different impressions. No one was ever more fastidious than Whistler in seeing a print through the press, and one purpose of this exhibition is to show by numerous examples the importance of this aspect of his work. From first to last he was faithful to the great tradition of etching as essentially a linear art, and he remains one of its most representative masters.

on right, and vertical lines at extreme left.

C. Another impression of same state. Grayer effect.

D. The plate retouched.

87 Shipping at Liverpool. W. 84.

88 Chelsea Bridge and Church. W. 85;
Sup. p. 36.

A. Early proof, before the barge with sail at the right.

B. A boat with a sail is now etched in at the right, the sail being nearly white.

C. There is added work, and a flock of birds in the sky.

D. The sail is outlined by heavy dry-point work and the birds are much less distinct.

89 Speke Hall. W. 86.

A. Without the butterfly. A young woman in the foreground is sketched in dry-point, and turned toward the house, which is unfinished at the left.

B. The butterfly on the left. A young woman in profile now replaces the young woman mentioned in A.

C. The figure of the young woman is removed.

90 Speke Hall, No. 2. Sup. 269.

A. Before the figures.

B. With the figures. 98. 402

91 The Model Resting. W. 87.

A. Early impression. There are only four distinct horizontal lines of shading in the background to the left of the figure, a little above the hip, and two on the right. Foul biting at the top of the plate.

B. The number of horizontal lines are increased by fine dry-point lines close together. There is a heavy black mark on the bridge of the nose, and there are extra perpendicular lines to the right of the head and shoulder, two of which extend to the horizontal lines mentioned.

C. Additional vertical lines in the right background. The butterfly is about half way up the plate, at the left.

D. At the left there is closer line work, and the hair on that side of the head has been removed. Lines of shading on the face.

92 Whistler's Mother. W. 88. 13. 242

93 Swan Brewery. W. 89.

94 Fosco. W. 90.

95 The Velvet Dress. W. 91.

A. First state.

B. Second state.

C. Third state. The plate completely altered by having been reworked and reinforced by heavy dry-point work. A hat is now on the head.

96 The Little Velvet Dress. W. 92.

A. First state.

B. Second state. There are additional horizontal lines in the left background.

97 F. R. Leyland. W. 93.

98 Fanny Leyland. W. 94.

99 Elinor Leyland. W. 95.

A. Before the butterfly.

B. With the butterfly. Added work.

C. The background at the left strengthened by heavy dry-point lines; the butterfly shaded by delicate upright lines. There are new short horizontal lines from the left forearm to below the butterfly.

D. Diagonal lines run from right elbow around the head to the left shoulder. The face is changed.

- 100 Florence Leyland. W. 96; Sup. p. 36.
A. First state.
B. Second state.
C. Third state. Plate reworked.
- 101 F. R. Leyland's Mother. W. 227.
A. First state. 18. 402
B. Second state. There are oblique lines at the left of the head.

- 104 Tatting. W. 98.
- 105 Maude, Standing. W. 99.
A. Without the fur tippet and before the butterfly.
B. With the tippet and butterfly. The work on the arms and gown reduced, and the skirt lengthened behind. More work in the background.
C. The right arm almost burnished out preparatory to altering the line of the waist.
D. Added dry-point work all over the plate. The hand now shows, and the tippet is more complete.

ETCHINGS AND DRY-POINTS

106 Maude, Seated. W. 100.

A. First state.

B. Second state. Added horizontal lines run from left edge of the plate to the hand.

C. The face is entirely redrawn, and the background is carried around to the left of it.

107 The Beach. W. 101.

108 Tillie: a Model. W. 102.

"Tillie Gilchrist" in pencil.

A. The butterfly is not shaded.

B. The butterfly is shaded by delicate up-right dry-point lines. There are a few more lines in the background, and the hair is differently arranged.

109 Nude Figure, Standing. Sup. 372.

110 Seated Girl. W. 103.

A. First state, on Japan paper.

B. Second state. The plate reinforced with heavy dry-point lines. Below the elbow there are twelve dry-point lines instead of six.

111 The Desk. W. 104.

112 Agnes. W. 106.

113 The Boy. W. 109.

- A.* Before the butterfly. Before any lines over the head, etc.
- B.* The legs and arms have little shading. Perpendicular lines over the head. The butterfly is at the left.
- C.* Additional work on the left leg, between the legs and in the background below at the right.
- D.* The legs and arms are covered with lines. New work in the background.

114 A Child on a Couch. W. 112.

- A.* Before the butterfly.
- B.* With the butterfly.

115 Steamboats off the Tower. W. 114.

- A.* Before the division of the long boat in the foreground into two boats. There is no moon. "Custom House Wharf," in pencil, by Whistler.
- B.* The boat in the foreground is now divided into two boats by a single stroke. There are two additional curved lines over the bow of the foremost boat, and the moon appears at the right.

C. Added work all over the plate, producing a darker effect. There are five slightly oblique lines added to the left of the bow of the boat in the centre of the foreground. The shadows of the shipping are extended, particularly those in the centre.

116 The Little Forge. W. 115.

- A.* Before the butterfly.
- B.* The same. Drawn upon with charcoal.
- C.* The plate enriched with more work. The centre tree seen through the window is now indicated by two lines forming an irregular \surd .

117 Two Ships. W. 116.

- A.* The two ships are not shaded on the decks. The small boat has only four lines to indicate seats.
- B.* Added work all over the plate. The decks and small boat now shaded.

118 The Piano. W. 117.

- A.* Before the butterfly.
- B.* With the butterfly. Additional lines in the background.

119 The Scotch Widow. W. 118.

123 Speke Shore. W. 119.

A. First state.

B. Second state. New work all over the plate.

124 The Dam Wood. W. 120.

A. Before the butterfly.

B. With the butterfly. Young trees delicately indicated in the background at the right.

125 Shipbuilders' Yard. W. 121.

A. First state.

B. Second state. The figure in the centre has been removed, and another, delicately expressed, substituted. New lines in the sky immediately above the ship-ping.

126 The Guitar Player. W. 122.

A. First state.

B. Second state, richly printed. The background at the right now covered with lines.

C. Another impression.

127 London Bridge. W. 123.

A. Before the butterfly. There is no cross-hatching under the bridge; no shading on the boat nor on the men in it.

B. The shape of the market van on the bridge has been slightly altered. There are a number of very short lines over the centre of the arch, some upright and some oblique, and the work mentioned as lacking in the first state has been added.

C. The bow of the small boat at the right is shaded with vertical lines. The shading under the bridge is closer.

128 Price's Candle Works. W. 124.

A. First state.

B. Second state.

C. Third state. The boat with three men in it in the foreground is removed. The mast and sail of the barge are larger, and the butterfly is added at lower right of plate.

- 129 Battersea: Dawn. W. 125.
A. First state.
B. Second state.
- 130 The Muff. W. 126.
- 131 Sketch of Ships. W. 127.
- 132 The White Tower. W. 128.
- 133 A Sketch from Billingsgate. W. 130. 54, 291
A. There is no butterfly, and there are no shadows in the water.
B. The boats at the right are shaded with short diagonal lines; shading in the water; the butterfly at lower right edge of the plate.
C. Additional work all over the plate; a different figure in the bow of the barge; the dock at the right is heavily shaded.
- 134 Fishing Boats — Hastings. W. 131.
A. Early proof, with a small, faint butterfly, and before the delicate horizontal lines beneath it.
B. A broad butterfly has replaced the small one, and there is delicate dry-point work in the distance underneath it.

C. A smaller butterfly in outline is now etched over the larger one, which can barely be seen underneath. The dry-point work and nearly all the lines in the sky have disappeared.

135 Wych Street. W. 132.

136 Free-Trade Wharf. W. 134.

A. The plate incomplete. To the left of the man in the wherry there is a group of boats indistinctly drawn. No butterfly.

B. The plate finished. The butterfly is at the lower left.

C. A series of horizontal dry-point lines are introduced in the sky, including a number of very short ones near the upper left corner.

D. The short lines and the sky behind the shipping are removed.

137 The Thames towards Erith. W. 135.

A. First state.

B. Second state. The rowboats are now shaded by vertical lines. There is a heavier sky introduced.

138 Lindsay Houses. W. 136.

In the foreground water, across which are seen, from right to centre, two sloops and several barges; behind them a row of old-fashioned houses; to the left of these a clump of high bushes, tower, flagstaff and drawbridge. The butterfly is half-way up the plate, an inch from the left.

139 From Pickled Herring Stairs. W. 137.

- A.* Before any shading on the boats in the foreground.
- B.* Dry-point work added all over the plate. The boats in the foreground are shaded by short oblique lines running from right to left.
- C.* The side of the boat at the left of the two men in the rowboat is now shaded.
- D.* More work in the sky. The large building at the extreme right is shaded by delicate, vertical dry-point lines.

140 Lord Wolseley. W. 138.

- A.* Impression in brown ink.
- B.* Impression in black ink. There are additional vertical lines in the upper left background.

141 St. James's Street. W. 140.

142 Battersea Bridge. W. 141.

- A.* The three houses to the left of the sailboat are unfinished; the centre of the sail is not cleaned.
- B.* The plate completed.

143 Whistler, with the White Lock. W. 142.

144 The Large Pool. W. 143.

- A.* Early proof before the butterfly. Little shading on the boats or shipping. The house on the extreme left is not expressed.
- B.* The plate practically finished by additional work all over it. The butterfly, heavily shaded, is at the bottom of the plate, an inch and a quarter from the left.
- C.* Slight changes in the sky. Fifteen short horizontal lines are now to the right of the post at the left, $\frac{1}{16}$ of an inch from the top. The sail of the boat at the extreme right is completely shaded; the mast is lengthened and has a pennant. The side of the house at the right of that with the pointed front is shaded by slightly oblique lines running from left to right, as is the house to the left of it. The near side of the outside boat, on the extreme right, is shaded with oblique lines. There are other minor changes.

145 The "Adam and Eve," Old Chelsea.
W. 144.

Impression printed by Whistler, before the issue by Hogarth. Butterfly in the sky, almost directly over the tower of the church.

JAMES MCNEILL WHISTLER

146 Putney Bridge. W. 145.

148 Hurlingham. W. 147.

149 Fulham. W. 148.

A. Trial proof.

B. Finished plate.

150 Little Venice. W. 149.

151 Nocturne. W. 150.

A. Light effect, the plate nearly clean-wiped.

B. An impression, darker, in brown ink.

C. Another impression.

D. Another impression more richly printed.

E. A dark, even impression, in black-brown ink.

152 The Little Mast. W. 151.

153 The Little Lagoon. W. 152.

154 The Palaces. W. 153.

A. With the butterfly.

B. The butterfly removed.

155 The Doorway. W. 154.

- A.* Trial proof. The girl holds a piece of drapery, the end of which is in the water.
- B.* More work all over the plate; the figures in the distance and the chairs more developed. More shading in the water, partly expressed by vertical lines under the doorway.
- C.* Finished plate. The drapery has been removed, and the attitudes and features of the two figures in the doorway changed.
- D.* Rich effect of printing in black ink.
- E.* On Japan paper. The water shaded by dry-point lines running in every direction. The girl again holds a long piece of drapery, part of which is in the water.

156 The Piazzetta. W. 155.

157 The Traghetto.

Impression from the first plate never completed. There are no figures at the left.

158 The Traghetto. W. 156.

- A.* Early proof; before dry-point work in the arch; before the plate was cleaned.
- B.* Finished state.

159 The Riva. W. 157.

160 Two Doorways. W. 158.

- A.* Trial proof, with gondola.
- B.* Trial proof, with different figures.
- C.* Before the varied lines in the water below the doorway.
- D.* With the lines. The figures in the doorway are altered and more distinct.

161 The Beggars. W. 159.

- A.* Early proof. The taller of the two beggars is a young woman. The man in the distance has his face averted and his cloak wrapped closely around him.
- B.* Early proof with bracket and large lantern. The butterfly is in the upper left corner.
- C.* Bracket removed. The lantern is smaller.
- D.* The plate is reworked and the butterfly removed.

162 The Mast. W. 160.

- A.* Early proof. The man at the right has a short blouse.
- B.* The figure of the man is redrawn, and has a long blouse. There are cross-lines on the left arm of the woman sewing at the right.

163 Doorway and Vine. W. 161.

- A.* The man in the doorway has only one arm and one leg. The figures and window across the canal are not drawn in.

ETCHINGS AND DRY-POINTS

- B.* The man has two legs, the figures and window are now drawn in, the interior of the doorway has been made darker, and the figures in the window at top are partly erased.
- C.* The interior of the doorway made less dark. The ten panes of the window are now larger. The shadow of the figures across the canal is accented strongly on the wall. The left figure in the window at top is more distinct.
- D.* The shadow of the figures is now faint, the two figures in the window at top are clearly expressed, and there is more work in the interior of the doorway at top.

164 Wheelwright. W. 162.

165 San Biagio. W. 163.

- A.* Slight indication of a woman in the arch at the right.
- B.* Cross-hatching now in place of the woman, who has been burnished out.
- C.* Fine lines now cover the lower part of the wall of the arch at the right.

166 Bead-Stringers. W. 164.

167 Turkeys. W. 165.

168 Fruit-Stall. W. 166.

- A.* A series of vertical lines expresses the shadow of the awning. The girl is standing straight in the doorway.
- B.* The plate is cleaned. The heavy lines under the awning have been removed and delicate fine lines substituted. The girl is now inclining forward and holding up her dress.

169 San Giorgio. W. 167.

- A.* Before the butterfly.
- B.* With the butterfly.

170 Nocturne Palaces. W. 168.

- A.* In black ink. Before the butterfly.
- B.* The same, in brown ink.
- C.* Cross-hatching on the wall, just over the water at the left.
- D.* Another impression.
- E.* With the butterfly.

171 Long Lagoon. W. 169.

- A.* Before the butterfly.
- B.* With the butterfly.

172 Temple. W. 170.

173 The Bridge. W. 171.

- A.* Before the plate was cleaned ; the butterfly at lower right corner.

B. The sky almost without lines. The butterfly burnished out.

174 Upright Venice. W. 172.

A. Unfinished proof, before the quay, boats, etc., in the foreground.

B. Finished state.

175 Little Court. W. 173.

176 Lobster Pots. W. 174.

177 The Riva, No. 2. W. 175.

178 Drury Lane. W. 176.

179 The Balcony. W. 177.

A. The figure in the boat is in shadowy outline; the woman in the doorway is at the right.

B. The two figures on the extreme right of the balcony are unfinished, and the woman in the doorway is at, and facing to, the left. The man in the boat is redrawn.

C. The figures on the balcony are finished, also the man in the boat and the woman in the doorway. Diagonal cross-lines accent the shadow of the doorway in the water.

180 Fishing-Boat. W. 178.

- A.* First state. The face of the man is white; less work on the net.
- B.* Second state. The face and chest of the man are covered with fine lines. The lines on the awning over his head are blurred.

181 Ponte Piovan. W. 179.

- A.* Impression richly printed.
- B.* New lines at lower right corner, and on the wall at the left, just above the bridge.

182 The Garden. W. 180.

- A.* Early proof, lightly printed. Two boys are on the steps, and the woman at the right in the further doorway is not clearly expressed.
- B.* There is a white space instead of the boy at the right, who has been removed. The bushes at the right, in the garden, are altered, also the figures in the doorway.
- C.* There is added work all over the plate. A cat is in the place of the boy on the steps, at the right.

183 The Rialto. W. 181.

- A.* The plate uncleaned. Numerous shadowy figures in the foreground.
- B.* The plate cleaned.

184 Long Venice. W. 182.

185 Furnace Nocturne. W. 183.

- A.* Early impression, before cross-hatching on each side of the doorway or below it. The man at the furnace is tall and has no covering on his head. The window back of him is strongly expressed.
- B.* A short man with a cap has taken the place of the tall one; the window behind him is much less positive, and the work is closer all over the plate. Cross-hatching at the top, around the outside window, etc.
- C.* Closer work and cross-hatching all over the plate, particularly in the water below the corners of the doorway.
- D.* New lines at lower right, in the water and just above it.
- E.* Diagonal lines running from left to right are added to the shadow in the water below the centre of the doorway; also, an inch to the left of the doorway, ten short diagonal lines cross the base of the wall to the water. There is more work around the head in the window, giving it greater prominence.

186 Quiet Canal. W. 184.

187 Salute: Dawn. W. 185.

188 Lagoon: Noon. W. 186.

189 Murano — Glass Furnace. W. 187.

190 Fish-Shop, Venice. W. 188.

A. The fish-shop at the right and the figures in it are not expressed. There is no cross-hatching above the shop.

B. The shop and the three figures in it are now drawn in. Intricate cross-hatching above it, oblique lines in the archway.

C. Cross-hatching in the archway at the extreme right.

D. Upright lines are added in the water on each side of the passageway in the centre, some of them reaching almost to the edge of the plate.

191 The Dyer. W. 189.

A. Early impression in reddish-brown ink.

B. Later impression in brown-black ink.

192 Little Salute. W. 190.
